Reviews

"This excellent book on education in South-East Asia is a welcome addition to the literature on the region, not only because South-East Asia is growing and changing so fast but because it has often been neglected by educators in Europe and the north. Unlike many comparative and international education books that one does not find any particular theme. Instead all the authors are experts in their particular country. They are writing about what they perceive to be the main contemporary issues and problems facing their respective education systems. An important feature worth mentioning is that each chapter links well with others where additional information and suggestions may be found. Highly recommended to students and scholars with an interest in South-East Asia." - Keith Waters, Emeritus Professor of Comparative and International Education, University of
